GREAT MYSTERIES NUMBER 5

WHY DO PEOPLE LEAVE 5 MINUTES EARLY?

IMAGINE THE SCENE...

There you are sat in your front room, it's Saturday night, dark and cold outside but you're warm. The heat glows orange from your face as the dog curls up in front of the open fire. Your family sit motionless as they view the television - but for the occasional "it's the butler", "no it can't be the butler he's far too old" etc., etc. It's an Agatha Christie 'who dunnit?' Miss Marple is chasing the ruthless Chippingcleghorn murderer.

The point arrives (after 4 or 5 hours) when everyone gathers into a small room and Miss Marple is about to give her speech. Then suddenly you stand, walk over to the television set, switch it off and all go to bed without a word. This all makes perfect sense doesn't it? After all you've seen most of the film, who cares what happens in the last 5 or 10 minutes?

Rather like football really, when the Owls were playing Chelsea in the quarter-final of the League Cup. Remember we were 3-0 up at half time thanks to a Brian Marwood screamer. Then after half-time Canonville appeared - scored with his first touch and 3-0 quickly became 3-4. Well at that point, with ooooh five or ten minutes left 10 or 15,000 people decided it was time to leave. Sterland then banged in that penalty (I'll never forget the look on Rougvie's face after he gave it away) and suddenly all those people who'd just pulled the handle on the car door - laughing at "Those idiots who stayed to watch 'em lose" were caught in a situation of extra time and had to run hell-for-leather back to the ground!

Where do they go when they leave early? Well I can exclusively reveal from my sources that in fact there is a very select club - 'The Five Minute Club'. Where the members - 'The Five Minuters' meet on exactly 85 minutes. They sit, drinking halves of orange juice viewing assorted classical close finishes like the '66 World Cup final or Arsenal v West Ham United 1980 FA Cup final etc. Torturing themselves by switching off with 85 minutes on the clock. In fact it was due to a campaign by the Five-Minuters that the new clock depicting the game-time was installed on the scoreboard.

Just think every season these people miss 1 hour 40 minutes of home games and 3 hours 20 if they get up to the same tricks at away matches too! That's more than 3 games a season.

But the real question I've got for the Five-minuters is what do they do at places like Middlesbrough where there is a lock-in? No doubt they take a blind-fold and ear plugs!

First of all a warm welcome to our visitors BRONTE, who like ourselves have made an uncertain start to the season.

Today is a very important game for us after two defeats in which we struggled to find our pre-season form.

Our defending and passing has been poor but the girls have been working hard to put it right and all in all the team spirit remains high.

Again many thanks for your support.
